DAILY COTTON LETTER.

DAILY COTTON LETTER.

The foliowing is the daily cotton letter of Atwood, Violett & Co., of New York, by private wire to C. W. Branch & Co.: The situation is strong, statistically, but a permanent support seems to be lacking, mainly because there is a continuation of the flood of information from those who insist upon having their large crop ideas confirmed; that the plantations and interior points in the South are holding a vast amount of cotton, which condition of things must exist in order to continu what they say—we won't disnify it as an estimate. In consequence of this, the long interest is made timid, by predictions of a larger movement to follow the present light receipts, which to-day, at ports, are 8,000 bales, against 14,000 bales last year and 20,052 bales in 1800, and therefore it gives strength to the efforts that are being made to cause liquidation of the long interest at lower prices. Even though repeating ourselves, we feel that we are only bringing to the attention of the southern people who still hold part of the cop of this season when we say that they have the settlement of prices under their own control, because, unless they force their cotton to the visible interior weekly reported points, or to the daily reported ports, at a rate beyond their immediate requirements, there will be a gradual distribution of the million bales yet to come into sight after to-morrow and prevent the general movement from being of an excessive character in any one day or one week. We recognize, as it is, that it might be injudicious to offer any advice of this kind. As an evidence of how rapidly stocks are being depleted in Texas, we have the following to-day from our New Orleans firm: Decaturation of the southern solows, as an interest in the monthly report of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange shows that the January movement was 774,007 bales, against 1,016 bales; Fort Worth, 647 bales, against 1,020 bales; Fort Worth, 647 bales, against 1,020 bales; and who have anticipated the abnormal movement of the past mon ost beles on March 1st. There came into sight after January lat last year to September 1st, nearly 1,400,000 bales, an amount never exceeded but four times in thirteen yars, and two of those years were seasons of monstrous crops—namely, 1840-91 and 1841-92. It is a desperate effort on the part of those whose interests are so interwoven with the big crop estimates to rersuade the cotton world that 7,750,000 bales is even a bare possibility.
